Teaching Science to Students with SEN

This course will consider approaches and strategies for overcoming potential barriers to learning science and provide practical ideas and examples that can be used to help SEN students in mainstream classrooms and also in special school environments.

These will include examples of good practice, such as using multisensory learning, symbol supported text and learning games. Reference will be made to P scales, schemes of work and assessment materials.

The course provides strategies for participants to support their science departments in addressing inclusion.

Course outcomes and details

Participants will be able to:

- demonstrate an understanding of inclusion for science teaching and learning
- use a range of ideas for addressing accessibility to science with a key focus on scientific enquiry
- assess progress and provide feedback to students with special educational needs
- use what they have learned to make an impact in their own school or department
